Information regarding doing a roundtable/demo or a workshop/class for the Eastside Miniature Show in June, 2008

Why do dealers doing demos or classes get a discount on their table fees? Because we want to draw more buyers, and buyers like classes, and because we know a demo or class is extra work for dealers willing to do one.

Things to consider before committing to do a demo or class:

- First, it should be fun for you.
- Second, it should be easy to do.
- Third, you'll need to be away from your table for the length of the class or demo [one hour maximum]. Show management can provide a table sitter, but nothing replaces you.
- Fourth, it should be something that the participants can either get a good start on (such as a project that you demonstrate part of that may not be able to be completed during the entire time), or can buy a kit from you for, or learn a new technique from.
- Fifth, any kit or material fees or fees for the class or demo are yours.

We encourage you to provide class/demo participants with a simple feedback form, and, with your permission, allow show management to share the results so that we can quote people telling you how much they enjoyed your class or demo.

Completed workshop forms for demos and classes may be returned with table fees and signed contracts, or sent separately, but must be received no later than May 1, 2008. You can wait to send in your contract and table fee until later if you wish (no later than June 1). The sooner a workshop form is returned, however, the sooner we can advertise it on the show website.

Show management reserves the right of final approval of all demos and classes, and dealers must understand that very similar or duplicative classes or demos will not be scheduled to ensure variety. Also, please think of this if you are considering doing a demo or class: would you want to participate in the class/demo?

If you plan a demo or class, please be aware that if for any reason you do not hold the demo or class, you will be responsible for reimbursing show management for the amount of any discount you received for your table fee.
